South Central Human Service Center in Jamestown is closed temporarily today, June 15 due to power outage

BISMARCK, N.D. – The North Dakota Department of Human Services announced its South Central Human Service Center in Jamestown is temporarily closed today, June 15, due to a power outage.

Team members are notifying people who have scheduled individual appointments or group therapy sessions at the regional human service center.

Individuals in crisis can still access walk-in assessments and triage services this morning. The center's 24-hour confidential crisis phone line for clients remains available at 701-253-6304.

Department officials have no details about when the power will be restored, but expect to provide an update about the reopening of the center later this morning.

The satellite clinic in Valley City remains open.

The human service center serves residents of Barnes, Dickey, Foster, Griggs, LaMoure, Logan, McIntosh, Stutsman and Wells counties. Services include community-based behavioral health services, program management for people with developmental disabilities, aging services, and other services.
