Update: South Central Human Service Center in Jamestown reopened today, June 15 following morning power outage

BISMARCK, N.D. – The North Dakota Department of Human Services announced its South Central Human Service Center in Jamestown has reopened today, June 15, following a morning power outage.

The center is now seeing clients with scheduled afternoon appointments or group therapy sessions. A behavioral health team is available to help individuals in crisis with walk-in assessments and triage services. The center also has a 24-hour confidential crisis phone line for clients at 701-253-6304.

The human service center serves residents of Barnes, Dickey, Foster, Griggs, LaMoure, Logan, McIntosh, Stutsman and Wells counties. Services include community-based behavioral health services, program management for people with developmental disabilities, aging services and other services.
