Superintendent's Foreword

These new North Dakota academic content standards for social studies provide our educators, school administrators, and parents concise statements of what our students should know and be able to do during each step of their education journey, from kindergarten through high school.

The North Dakota Constitution, Article VIII, recognizes the importance of public education in nurturing prosperity, happiness, and a “high degree of intelligence, patriotism, integrity and morality.” Statewide academic content standards help us reach these honorable objectives. By using our new, challenging social studies standards as a benchmark for schools to adopt curriculum and measure student achievement, we are supporting comparability of educational opportunity statewide.

While these North Dakota social studies standards represent a statewide reference point for teaching social studies content in classrooms, local school districts are encouraged to use the standards as a guide for developing their own local, customized social studies curriculum.

This publication is the result of months of conscientious work by 24 North Dakota social studies educators from our K-12 schools and university system. They agreed to devote the many hours needed to write these new standards. They represented various areas of expertise, including general education, special education, English learners, and higher education.

The work on these new standards began in September 2018 and continued through May 2019. The writing committee's initial draft was made available statewide for public comment, which generated useful opinions from teachers, administrators, parents, and the community.

A panel of representatives from the public and additional educators, with strong beliefs about what our social studies standards should include provided another layer of review. I am grateful to those who devoted their time and talents to review the draft standards and provide recommendations to the writing committee.

No one is better qualified to improve our North Dakota social studies standards than our North Dakota educators. This document is an exemplar of the best in North Dakota education – North Dakota teachers, writing statewide standards in an open, transparent, and painstaking manner.

Each member of the writing team deserves our thanks for their extensive research, analysis, and deliberations. Thanks to their work, these standards are ready to be implemented in classrooms across the state.

North Dakota Social Studies Standards Introduction

North Dakota schools educate the minds of our children for college, career, and civic life. To sustain democratic principles, students must become thoughtful citizens who solve problems through connecting the past, present, and future. Social studies education should facilitate knowledge of human diversity and dignity as well as uphold the common good.

The philosophy behind the standards is to use content knowledge to engage students in active inquiry. Activities and assessments that require students to synthesize, analyze, evaluate, compare, contrast, think, and argue are emphasized.

The standards are comprised of overarching strands: Civics & Government, Geography, Economics, North Dakota Studies, History (United States and World), Psychology, and Sociology. Each strand contains standards, benchmarks, and guiding questions/guiding topics. The standards are developed with the understanding that six of these strands (Civics & Government, Geography, Economics, North Dakota Studies, United States History and World History) are for all K-12 students. The behavioral science strands have been designed for high school students attending schools that offer courses in Psychology and Sociology.

Social Studies Content Standards Development Process

The development of the North Dakota Social Studies Content Standards was a multi-phase process. State Superintendent of Public Instruction Kirsten Baesler established a statewide committee through an application process that included teachers, administrators, and higher education faculty. Over four multi-day sessions, the committee developed a new set of standards. The committee began by reviewing state and national standards. The work was guided by current disciplinary knowledge and research in social studies education, North Dakota Native American Essential Understandings, Generation Citizen, and the College, Career & Civic Life C3 Framework for Social Studies State Standards. Drawing from the information gained from those documents, the committee drafted the initial North Dakota Social Studies Content Standards. Input from one round of public comments, as well as one review by the content standard review committee, was used to inform the development of the new standards. The committee began their work in September of 2018 and completed the development of new standards in May of 2019.

North Dakota Native American Essential Understandings:

How we relate to everything:

- Sacred Relatives: Native people practice a deep interconnectedness with the land, the resources, the water, all living things and all human beings. Land stewardship, respect for all two-legged, four-legged, winged, crawlers and swimmers and a strong belief in the sacredness of all human beings are key elements of our spirituality.

How we promote and sustain our cultures, languages & traditions:

- Learning & Storytelling: Traditional teaching and the passing on of knowledge and wisdom was done through storytelling, song, ceremonies, and daily way of life, often incorporating specific gender and age specific responsibilities. These continue to be some of the best modes for learning for both Native and non-Native learners.
- Sharing & Generosity: Native people have rich traditions of sharing and generosity which include gifting, shared meals, Pow Wow gatherings, shared living spaces and care for relatives, including the environment, natural resources, and waters.
- Sense of Humor: Native people have a rich history of shared sense of humor that includes teaching stories involving Iktomi, Maymaygwisi and Nanabozhoo. These stories and this unique sense of humor continue to support our resiliency and cohesiveness.

How we respond to & contribute to all of society from local to global:

- Tribal Policies, Treaties & Sovereignty: Native people practice self-determination, developing tribal policies and practicing political activism. Despite a history of US policies and Treaties that have often been detrimental, Native people are members of sovereign nations that predate the US government.
- Native Contributions: Native people continue to contribute to all levels of society from local to global in diverse fields including medicine, science, government, education, economics, art, music, and many more.

Who we are:

- Native Identity: Individual and communal identity is defined and supported by shared Native languages, kinship systems, Tiospaye, Clan structures, traditional teachings, values, sacred laws, and ceremonies. A continuum of tribal identity, unique to everyone, ranges from assimilated to traditional lifestyle. There is no “generic American Indian”.

Grades K-5 Content Standards

To be a responsible and productive member of today’s society, a student needs to have a broad, connected, and useful knowledge of social studies and civics education. A consistent, high-quality social studies education program is essential for all students, providing a foundation for intelligent and precise thinking. Social studies education should also provide every student the opportunity to choose among a full range of future career paths and to contribute to society as an informed and active citizen.

The K-5 content standards for civics & government, economics, geography, and history provide guidance for educators delivering social studies instruction. Each strand is divided into major themes. Under each theme, the standards are presented in two grade bands (K-2, 3-5). Grade banding provides flexibility to those delivering instruction while recognizing various school contexts across North Dakota. It is the expectation that specific benchmarks for each grade level will be determined by individual school districts. The guiding questions column includes various subject matter that can be used to help teachers teach the content and students to reach the standard. While not required, the writing committee feels that these are essential topics to explore.

The standards are written broadly enough so that each grade level can apply the standards to multiple areas of learning. For example, consider Geography Standard: G.3_5.1 Construct maps, graphs, and other representations of both familiar and unfamiliar places. This standard can apply to a local community, to the state of North Dakota, or to a region of the United States. The standard itself does not specify where the study needs to take place; rather, standards can be applied to multiple grade levels and areas of study.

Grades 6-12 Content Standards

To be a responsible and productive member of today’s society, a student needs to have a broad, connected, and useful knowledge of social studies and civics education. A consistent, high-quality social studies education program is essential for all students, providing a foundation for intelligent and precise thinking. Social studies education should also provide every student the opportunity to choose among a full range of future career paths and to contribute to society as an informed and active citizen.

The 6-12 content standards are divided into the following strands: Civics & Government, Economics, Geography, North Dakota Studies, United States History, World History, Sociology, and Psychology. Standards are written broadly enough so that each grade level can apply the standards to multiple areas of learning. The standards themselves do not specify a course in which the study needs to take place; rather, standards can be applied to multiple grade levels and areas of study.

Grade banding provides flexibility to those delivering instruction while recognizing various school contexts across North Dakota. It is the expectation that specific benchmarks for each grade level be determined by individual school districts. The guiding topics column includes various subject matter that can be used to help teachers deliver content. While not required, the writing committee feels that these are essential topics to explore.

How to Read This Section

Standard Coding Example for Civics & Government, Economics, Geography, and North Dakota Studies

C.6_12.2 - Represents the second standard of the Civics and Government strand at the 6-12 grade band

- First, the initial letter represents the social studies strand (e.g., C=Civics & Government, E=Economics, G=Geography, WH= WorldHistory)
- Next, the grade band is represented (e.g., 6-12)
- Then, the last number of the code represents the Social Studies standard within the strand
- Benchmark codes include an additional number to denote the benchmark that corresponds to the standard
- Additionally, standards and/or benchmarks that specifically apply to North Dakota Century Code 15.1-21 Curriculum and Testing are denoted with a ♦ symbol

Code	Standard	6-12 Benchmarks	Guiding Topics
C.6_12.2	Analyze the structures and functions of governments.	C.6_12.2.1 Differentiate/compare forms and origins of governments. C.6_12.2.2 Examine the role and purposes of government. ## Standard Coding Example for United States History, World History, Psychology, and Sociology

These standards are coded in a specific way to denote both eras and domains.

US.6_12.1-6.E4.3 - Represents the 6-12 grade band of US History and the six US history standards that need to be taught within the third benchmark of the fourth era

- First, the standard codes are to be read the same as the Civics & Government, Economics, Geography, and North Dakota Studies standards
- However, benchmark codes include additional numbers that correspond to all Social Studies anchor standards within the strand; each anchor standard should be taught through the benchmarks provided
- Then, the benchmark codes include an “E” (or “D”) that represent the historical era, or domain, to which the benchmark belongs
- The final number "3" stands for the order in which the benchmark appears within that era or domain
- Additionally, standards and/or benchmarks that specifically apply to North Dakota Century Code 15.1-21 Curriculum and Testing are denoted with a ♦ symbol

6-12 Civics & Government

These standards band grades 6-12 in civics & government. It should be noted that some topics will overlap while others will exclusively appear in either middle or high school. Repeated topics should be taught at the developmentally appropriate level. The purpose of this banding is to allow district autonomy in curriculum mapping. The guiding topics column includes various subject matter that can be used to help students reach the standard. While not required, the standards committee feels that these are essential topics in a civics & government education.

Throughout the grade band, a basic knowledge of the foundation, role, and impact of government is emphasized. Students will begin examining the changes in government over time and the continual balance between individual rights and the common good. The goal is that students will learn the skills necessary to understand the role of government in their daily lives and be able to engage in government at all levels. These standards help students become thoughtful citizens who are informed, engaged, and committed to the ideas and values of a democratic republic.

The knowledge of names and definitions is essential in/for acquiring knowledge; however, high-quality teaching and learning demands more than merely mastering facts and terms. Therefore, in teaching these standards, an inquiry approach is encouraged. Activities and assessments that require students to think, analyze, synthesize, evaluate, compare, contrast, and argue using a civic engagement lens should be emphasized.

6-12 Economics

Though these standards are written for grades 6-12, it is important to note that much of the content is specific to high school. At the middle school level, basic economic principles are best integrated within United States history, world history, and geography.

In creating a high school course, an attempt should be made to include all listed benchmarks. Suggested learning targets are provided; however, it should be noted this list is in no way exhaustive. These notes are simply to aid in the development of curriculum at the district and/or school level. In addition, the guiding topics column includes various subject matter that can be used to help students reach the standard. While not required, the writing committee feels that these are essential topics in an economics education.

The knowledge of names and definitions is essential for acquiring knowledge; however, high-quality teaching and learning demands more than merely mastering facts and terms. Therefore, in teaching these standards, it is encouraged to use an active economic inquiry approach. Activities and assessments that require students to think, analyze, synthesize, evaluate, compare, contrast, and argue using economic habits of mind should be emphasized.

6-12 Geography

These geography standards are based on the Five Themes of Geography: Place, Movement, Regions, Location, and Human-Environment Interaction. They are written at a middle school level for implementation as a class; however, they are written to be embedded throughout all 6-12 social studies curriculum. They are also intended to be used with increased rigor for a high school elective course. These standards are written to give students a global perspective, which they can apply to other courses of study. The guiding topics column includes various subject matter that can be used to help students reach the standard. While not required, the writing committee feels that these are essential topics in a geography education.

Quality geography education is more than memorizing places on a map. It involves an understanding of various cultures, their motivations, and their connections to the global community. It also includes a deep understanding of how human beings have altered the landscape of the Earth over time, both physically and culturally.

6-12 United States History

United States history content is separated into five eras. The six standards for United States history are the same for each era and are applicable to all eras of study. Within each era, benchmarks provide guidance on how to apply the standards to each era. The guiding topics column includes key topics fundamental to that era of study. It is the belief of the development committee that the guiding topics, while not required, illustrate multiple ways for students to successfully achieve the standards.

Refer to Appendix A for suggestions on scope and sequence.

6-12 World History

World history is about connections between people. Students need to understand how civilizations and cultures arose, developed, and interacted through conflict and peaceful exchange.

The vision of the development committee is inspired by historian Henri Pirenne, who said, “If I were an antiquarian, I would have eyes only for old stuff, but I am a historian. Therefore, I love life.” As a result, the committee wants to enrich students’ experience of the present through knowledge of the past by shifting away from automatic coverage of vast amounts of content. Because the histories of regions, countries, religions, and civilizations have made us who we are today, there is a need to develop narratives about history that help students make sense of the world by seeing it through the eyes of others. The freedom to do this will encourage students to connect past and present. It will also help them develop the skills, dispositions (such as moderation and empathy), and knowledge needed for global citizens in a diverse world who appreciate specific cultural and national contexts.

World history content is separated into four eras. The six standards for world history are the same for each era and are applicable to all eras of study. Benchmarks provide guidance on how to apply the standards to each era. The guiding topics column includes key topics fundamental to that era of study. It is the belief of the development committee that the guiding topics, while not required, illustrate multiple ways for students to successfully achieve the standards.

Refer to Appendix A for suggestions on scope and sequence.

6-12 North Dakota Studies

In North Dakota studies, the student will examine the people and events that have formed and transformed the landscape and cultures of the place and peoples that have become North Dakota. The student will examine important political and ideological movements, as well as economic, cultural, and political accomplishments of state, national, and world significance. The study of North Dakota should lead students to link North Dakota’s history to local, national, and global contexts.

The four standards of North Dakota studies are broken down into benchmarks for a deeper understanding of the standard. The committee has included suggested guiding topics for each standard that can assist in teaching the content. These standards are intended to be used for both the middle level North Dakota studies course and a high school elective course. They may also be embedded in other courses of study. These standards have been written with North Dakota Century Code’s requirement that this course is to have “...an emphasis on the geography, history, and agriculture of this state.” These standards will be used to further North Dakota students’ understanding of their state and its role in the United States and world.

Psychology is an elective course focusing on the scientific study of human behavior and mental processes. Since psychology is a science, it is constantly developing and changing. As a result, the writing committee elected to provide three broad anchor standards that apply to each domain.

Given that psychology is not a core area, the committee wanted to provide benchmarks that assist teachers in the planning of the course. The psychology standards are organized into eight broad content domains. Domains one, two, and three are central to the general understanding of psychology. The other five domains address broad content areas to be included in high school psychology as student interest or time dictates.

NORTH DAKOTA SOCIAL STUDIES CONTENT STANDARDS

Grades K–12

Appendix A: Social Studies Scope and Sequence Option

Appendix A: Social Studies Scope and Sequence Option

The following progression chart for K-12 social studies is a suggested outline for the sequence in social studies education in North Dakota. It suggests grade levels of specific subjects/focuses, but the standards themselves are banded K-5 and 6-12. This gives districts and teachers autonomy to decide what age levels are appropriate for the progression of learning within those bands.

If a subject is not listed in the suggested scope and sequence for a grade level, this does not mean a teacher cannot draw on an earlier subject/standard in his or her course of study. Promising practices should be used when determining what subjects need reinforcement within an individual course by the classroom teacher.

The developmental lens of how children view their world informed the K-5 grade bands (see table below). Kindergartners view the world through themselves and their families. Whereas, fifth graders can view themselves in relationship to the world. The topics listed are the lens with which the standards are viewed. Additional topics and themes are also listed. These topics/themes may include, but are not limited to, what is taught at each grade level and possible ideas for curriculum and lesson planning. The purpose of this document is to assist schools and districts in implementing the standards.

For the 6-12 grade band, two different progression options are noted. Option A includes World History as a separate course and Option B incorporates one required elective credit of social studies. These options are provided since World History is not a required course for graduation by North Dakota Century Code. These standards can be embedded in other courses of study where noted.

For World History and United States History, the eras are divided within those standards for grade levels necessary for an appropriate progression of learning. This does not mean teachers should be discouraged from reinforcing topics from an earlier era when gaps in knowledge are discovered. This does not discourage districts from making changes to which grade level subjects are taught within a grade level band. Also, equal instructional time does not necessarily have to be devoted to each era.

Appendix B: Native American Essential Understandings Learning Design

NDNAEU 1: Sacred Relatives How we relate to everything.

Native people practice a deep interconnectedness with the land, the resources, the water, all living things, and all human beings. Land stewardship, respect for all two-legged, four-legged, winged, crawlers, and swimmers, and a strong belief in the sacredness of all human beings are key elements of our spirituality.

NDNAEU 2: Learning and Storytelling How we promote and sustain our cultures, languages, and traditions.

Traditional teaching and the passing on of knowledge and wisdom were done through storytelling, song, ceremony, and daily way of life, often incorporating specific gender and age-specific responsibilities. These continue to be some of the best modes of learning for both Native and non-Native learners.

NDNAEU 3: Sharing and Generosity How we promote and sustain our cultures, languages, and traditions.

Native people have rich traditions of sharing and generosity which include gifting, shared meals, Pow Wow gatherings, shared living spaces, and care for relatives, including the environment, natural resources, and water.

NDNAEU 4: Sense of Humor How we promote and sustain our cultures, languages, and traditions.

Native people have a rich history of a shared sense of humor that includes teaching stories involving Iktomi, Maymaygwisi, and Nanabozhoo. These stories and this unique sense of humor continue to support our resiliency and cohesiveness.

“North Dakota Tribal Government”

NDNAEU 5: Tribal Policies, Treaties & Sovereignty | How We Respond to & Contribute to All of Society from Local to Global

Native people practice self-determination, develop tribal policies and practice political activism. Despite a history of United States policies and treaties that have often been detrimental, Native people are members of sovereign nations that predate the United States government.

NDNAEU 6: Native Contributions | How We Respond to & Contribute to All of Society from Local to Global Native people continue to contribute to all levels of society from local to global in diverse fields including medicine, science, government, education, economics, art, music, and many more.

NDNAEU 7: Native Identity | Who We Are

Individual and communal identity is defined and supported by shared Native languages, kinship systems, Tiospaye, Clan structures, traditional teachings, values, sacred laws, and ceremonies. A continuum of tribal identity, unique to everyone, ranges from assimilated to traditional lifestyle. There is no “generic American Indian”.

Compelling Question

North Dakota has several reservations in the state. How do the tribal governments work at Standing Rock, Spirit Lake, Turtle Mountain and Three Affiliated Tribes?

Standards and Practices

- US.6_12.1-6.E2.4 Explain the changing Native American federal policy and the impact on tribal sovereignty.
- ND.6_12.4.4 Analyze the effect of government policy, both historical and modern, toward Native American groups in North Dakota (e.g. Dawes Act, changes in federal and state Indian policies, civil rights movement; current issues surrounding gaming, housing, distribution of wealth, and health care, Indian Reorganization Act, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Indian Civil Rights Act, Indian Child Welfare Act, American Indian Religious Freedom Act, Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, Citizenship, American Indian Movement).

Staging the Question

You have learned about North Dakota State Government and will learn more about our National Government. How much do you know of our other governments that function in the state of North Dakota?

Supporting Question 1

What is the basic structure of tribal governments?

Formative Performance Task

Students will pick a tribe they would like to learn more about. Students will research and make a presentation on how a tribal government is set up.

Supporting Question 2

Appendix C: Civics Education Learning Design

Appendix C: Civics Education Learning Design

This appendix provides an interdisciplinary outline of examples and sample questions for incorporating civic knowledge, skills, and dispositions into a learning environment that focuses on two aspects of civic learning: 1) creating focused questions about issues and challenges in a student's community, and 2) taking informed action on community problems.

1.) Create structured questions or problem statements and undertake a process of inquiry.

Seek to develop students' capacity to develop a structured research question or articulate the dimensions of a specific policy problem. Ideally, students will learn that each subject area of social studies contains its own ways of defining the same phenomena.

For example, in studying the recession of 2008:

- A political scientist might ask, how did major political parties, government institutions, and the private sector respond?
- An economist might ask, what were the economic causes of the recession?
- A geographer might ask, how did the recession affect areas of the United States differently?
- A historian might ask, what related economic, political, and social events preceded the recession? For example, in studying the Civil Rights movement:

- A political scientist might ask, how did appeals to the United States Constitution factor into arguments made by the movement's leaders and institutions?
- An economist might ask, what financial incentives led some small business to support the movements and others to oppose it?
- A geographer might ask, how did the effectiveness of the movement vary in different regions of the United States, including North Dakota?
- A historian might ask, how might the Cold War era have influenced the reception of the movement?

2.) Take informed action, as appropriate, on community problems.

Provide opportunities for students to practice using the knowledge and skills that enable them to participate in civic life. Research indicates that optimal civic learning complements content-based instruction with the acquisition and practice of civic dispositions and skills. The examples below outline engagement opportunities which connect with varied classroom priorities, teaching strategies, and curricular approaches:

- Encourage student participation in school governance
- Identify a community problem, analyze its root causes, and devise a policy-oriented goal and plan for addressing the problem
- Participate in a service learning, community engagement strategy, or a simulated congressional/legislative hearing
- Address community-based or state-level challenges in the form of classroom discussions, essays, and other products of research
- Engage in discourse about public policy beyond the classroom through social media, letters to the editor, public presentations, or service-learning projects

College and Career Readiness Anchor Standards for Reading

The grades 6–12 standards on the following pages define what students should understand and be able to do by the end of each grade. They correspond to the College and Career Readiness (CCR) anchor standards below by number. The CCR and grade-specific standards are necessary complements—the former providing broad standards, the latter providing additional specificity—that together define the skills and understandings that all students must demonstrate.

Key Ideas and Details

- Read closely to determine what the text says explicitly and to make logical inferences from it; cite specific textual evidence when writing or speaking to support conclusions drawn from the text.
- Determine central ideas or themes of a text and analyze their development; summarize the key supporting details and ideas.
- Analyze how and why individuals, events, and ideas develop and interact over the course of a text.

Craft and Structure

- Interpret words and phrases as they are used in a text, including determining technical, connotative, and figurative meanings, and analyze how specific word choices shape meaning and tone.
- Analyze the structure of texts, including how specific sentences, paragraphs, and larger portions of the text (e.g., a section, chapter, scene, or stanza) relate to each other and the whole.
- Assess how point of view or purpose shapes the content and style of a text.

Integration of Knowledge and Ideas

- 7. Integrate and evaluate content presented in diverse media and formats, such as visuals, videos, tables, charts, and graphs, as well as in words.
- 8. Delineate and evaluate the argument and specific claims in a text, including the validity of the reasoning as well as the relevance and sufficiency of the evidence.
- 9. Analyze how two or more texts address similar themes or topics to build knowledge or to compare the approaches the authors take.

Range of Reading and Level of Text Complexity

- 10. Read and comprehend complex literary and informational texts independently and proficiently.

Note on range and content of student reading

Reading is critical to building knowledge in history/social studies as well as in science and technical subjects. College and career ready reading in these fields requires an appreciation of the norms and conventions of each discipline, such as the kinds of evidence used in history and science; an understanding of domain-specific words and phrases; an attention to precise details; and the capacity to evaluate intricate arguments, synthesize complex information, and follow detailed descriptions of events and concepts.

In history/social studies, for example, students need to be able to analyze, evaluate, and differentiate primary and secondary sources. When reading scientific and technical texts, students need to be able to gain knowledge from challenging texts that often make extensive use of elaborate diagrams and data to convey information and illustrate concepts. Students must be able to read complex informational texts in these fields with independence and confidence because the vast amount of reading in college and workforce training programs will be sophisticated nonfiction. It is important to note that these Reading standards are meant to complement the specific content demands of the disciplines, not replace them.

College and Career Readiness Anchor Standards for Writing

The grades 6–12 standards on the following pages define what students should understand and be able to do by the end of each grade. They correspond to the College and Career Readiness (CCR) anchor standards below by number. The CCR and grade-specific standards are necessary complements—the former providing broad standards, the latter providing additional specificity—that together define the skills and understandings that all students must demonstrate.

Text Types and Purposes

- Write arguments to support claims in an analysis of substantive topics or texts, using valid reasoning and relevant and enough evidence.
- Write informative/explanatory texts to examine and convey complex ideas and information clearly and accurately through the effective selection, organization, and analysis of content.
- Write narratives to develop real or imagined experiences or events using effective technique, well-chosen details, and well-structured event sequences.

Production and Distribution of Writing

- Produce clear and coherent writing in which the development, organization, and style are appropriate for a range of tasks, purposes, and audiences.
- Develop and strengthen writing as needed by planning, revising, editing, rewriting, or trying a new approach.
- Use technology, including the Internet, to produce and publish writing and to interact and collaborate with others.

Research to Build and Present Knowledge

- Conduct short as well as more sustained research projects based on focused questions, demonstrating understanding of the subject under investigation.
- Gather relevant information from multiple print and digital sources, assess the credibility and accuracy of each source, and integrate the information while avoiding plagiarism.
- Draw evidence from literary or informational texts to support analysis, reflection, and research.

Note on range and content of student writing

For students, writing is a key means of asserting and defending claims, showing what they know about a subject, and conveying what they have experienced, imagined, thought, and felt.

To be college and career ready writers, students must take task, purpose, and audience into careful consideration, choosing words, information, structures, and formats deliberately. They need to be able to use technology strategically when creating, refining, and collaborating on writing. They must become adept at gathering information, evaluating sources, and citing material accurately, reporting findings from their research and analysis of sources in a clear and cogent manner.

Students must have the flexibility, concentration, and fluency to produce high-quality first draft text under a tight deadline and the capacity to revisit and make improvements to a piece of writing over multiple drafts when circumstances encourage or require it. To meet these goals, students must devote significant time and effort to writing, producing numerous pieces over short and long periods of time throughout the year.

Narrative writing is not applicable as a separate requirement for history, social studies, science, and technical subjects. Students’ narrative skills continue to grow in these grades. In science and technical subjects, students must be able to write precise enough descriptions of the step-by-step procedures they use in their investigations or technical work that others can replicate them and (possibly) reach the same results.
