Friday, July 13, 2018
Dr. Dorothy Aguilera-Black Bear
“What Do Buffalos, Languages, Songs and Storytelling Have to Do With Native Student Success”.

Dr. Dorothy Aguilera-Black Bear (Choctaw) is currently working at the South Dakota DOE as the Project Manager and Accountability Specialist in the Division of Accountability and Assessment. She also serves as the lead evaluator for the Native American Achievement Pilot School Project that is funded by the SDDOE. Dorothy has led more than 25 research projects since earning her Ph.D. in Educational Foundations, Policy and Practice from the University of Colorado-Boulder in 2003.

Dorothy taught in preK-12 schools as a substitute teacher while earning her education degree. She held faculty positions at Lewis & Clark College in Portland, Oregon, New Mexico State University in Las Cruces, New Mexico and Argosy University in Denver, Colorado teaching in the fields of Educational Leadership, Multicultural Foundations of Education, Ethnic Studies, and Research and Evaluation Methodology; and mentored Native graduate students in teacher education and education leadership programs.